

Temeraire

An historically grounded exploration into salvaged styles, intended for attention, reference, and modern use.

DESIGNED BY

Quentin Schmerber

YEAR

Quentin Schmerber's Temeraire serif font family was not designed to be invisible. It is a typographic exploration meant to be seen — with its beauty, one could even say beheld. While some fonts aim to be as easily ignored as possible, Temeraire is offered as a gift to wide-eyed readers with its anything-but-boring character and its conspicuous inconsistency in styles.

Most type families increase the weight of each character to expand the family. Instead, research into 18th century sources produced Temeraire's wide range of letterforms, from the predictable to the odd and loosely related through time. Each style is designed to work alongside the others but are also standalone homages to specific parts of English lettering tradition: gravestone cutting, writing masters' copper-plates, Italiennes, and others.

Temeraire's Regular style is a contrast-loving Transitional Serif with vertical stress, making it great for period and classic works, ironic pieces, and modern throwbacks. The weight of the Bold squares off the ends of each glyph to give it stability, and the Italic style rings true: flowing, contrasting, and purposefully inconsistent.

Display Black

Italienne Italic

Temeraire's Display Black style is one salvaged from expressive gravestone artistry. The details most easily noticed are the 'g' with its descending bowl that has been pressed back up in the centre, and the additional serif on the 't' crossbar that holds its neighbouring character at bay. (The 'g' and 'Q' also have loopless alternates.)

The final style is the Italienne Italic, the horizontally stressed counterpoint to the family. By design its characters flow and bend in ways not in step with the rest of the family. All the weight has been pushed to either hemisphere within each glyph, resulting in a display style that demands space and peacefulness around it so its presence can impress.

Like all TypeTogether families, Temeraire's five styles meet the current designer's needs, including alternates for when the defaults are too boisterous. It works on screens for the audacious designer but truly shines in print. The Temeraire serif font family is resurrected from echoes in time and finds its family relation through impeccable taste.

THE DESIGNERS

Currently based in London, Quentin Schmerber maintains an active freelance practice in the fields of type design, printed matter, and lettering. He graduated with a Bachelor's in graphic design from the École Nationale Supérieure des Arts Décoratifs in Strasbourg, France. Quentin then acquired a master's Degree from the École Supérieure d'Art et Design in Amiens where he also attended the Esad Type programme. His graduation typeface, Temeraire, was awarded by TypeTogether's Typeface Publishing Incentive Programme in 2016 and released in 2018. In his spare time, Quentin works on self-initiated projects, writes about design and typography, tries to practice sign painting, watches B-movies, or reads comics.
